

Alexandria Gazette

FRIDAY EVENING, DEC. 28.

Fancy can but follow and hope accompany the flight of the statesman who, relieved from political cares, incontinently fled to plunge for relief into the mud baths of the Arkansas Hot Springs. A dozen or more not unknown to fame, with friends and attendants, have sought that boiling and dirty sanatorium, and are now or recently have been disporting themselves in its flood, hoping by the sacrifice of cuticle and comfort under the theory of similitudo curaturae to extract peccant internal evils with external grossness, and return purified in soul and body. The brave experiment should be attentively studied in its consequences. If a decrease of purely personal efforts; if an increase of moral or logical health or of intellectual power or oratorical influence is recognized in the pilgrims on their return, then indeed the country must consider the removal of the baths to Washington or of Washington to the baths.

HORNS.—Nothing is further from our wish says the Baltimore Gazette than to abridge the pleasures of childhood, but the blowing of those hideous horns gives them no joy worthy to be counted against the miseries of their fellow-creatures. They do not utter a merry Christmas note but a dreary, lugubrious blast, calculated to depress the most buoyant animal spirits; and the more the preference is done for them, the more the boys like them. That's because they are boys.

Miss Mary Breckinridge, a daughter of the late General John C. Breckinridge, was married in New York on Thursday to Mr. Anson Maltby.
